The Soft rear in the Sprint and the Medium in the Grand Prix had proven their effectiveness

Portimão is a particularly demanding circuit for tires. Riders need confidence under braking, particularly on the downhill sections, but also grip in fast corners and traction coming out of bends. The changes in track surface also cause load conditions to change very rapidly. The 2025 and 2024 events provided us with valuable insights. Despite changeable weather and grip that was at times difficult to gauge during practice, our tires enabled the riders to step up the pace and set new records on Sunday, when the track was dry again. The Hard front compound had set the benchmark, whilst the Soft rear in the Sprint and the Medium in the Grand Prix had proven their effectiveness. This experience will help us support our partners this year, particularly as the race takes place two weeks later in the season. We'll be paying particular attention to humidity and temperatures, which can change conditions from one session to the next, with rather low temperatures at the start of the day and milder ones in the afternoon. Our aim will be to enable the riders to fully exploit their bikes' potential, with the same level of confidence from the first lap to the last.
