In this region of Spain, a three-month shift in the calendar creates a great number of uncertainties. Moreover, this track isn't used very often, which raises additional questions about grip levels, especially as we don't yet know how the new asphalt will evolve over time.

Fortunately, we had a solid data base, and thanks to our engineers and forecasters, we were able to create a detailed profile of the tires that would perform best in this scenario.

Within this context, we decided to modify the casing of the front Hard tire by giving it a bit more rigidity. For the rear, we selected a new Soft compound designed to maintain its performance over a longer duration, potentially even for the entire Grand Prix distance, should our partners choose to go that route. We also considered the circuit layout, which features long straights with high speeds and heavy loads, as well as several challenging corners that require complex thermal management and strong braking. Turn 2 will be especially tricky, as it bends to the right after several left-hand curves, making it more difficult to maintain the right-side tire temperature. This round is considered a challenging one, but we have taken all necessary steps to ensure that, as always, our partners are in a position to break records and deliver thrilling races, thanks to the performance of our tires.
