Returning to Valencia is a real pleasure. The Grand Prix was cancelled in 2024 due to flooding, and coming back to this circuit brings a special energy. Valencia is always a great event, with a very warm atmosphere, thanks to the grandstands surrounding the track that create a stadium-like feeling. It really motivates the riders and the teams.

The circuit is demanding and very specific. It is strongly asymmetric, with a huge amount of load on the left side and much less on the right. The most critical point is the long corner leading onto the straight. The bikes stay leaned over for a long time, under acceleration, which requires a perfectly adapted tire. This is why we have a dedicated allocation here, used for several years. We bring three asymmetric front tires with a reinforced left shoulder, and two asymmetric rears with an even stiffer left shoulder. The solutions we bring this year are those initially planned for 2024 and are close to the 2023 specifications in terms of stiffness and compound balance.

The weather can vary a lot at this time of year. Over the past ten seasons we have seen hot conditions, cold conditions, rain, and a mix of all three. We expect cooler temperatures, yet our specifications are ready to handle any situation. The Ricardo Tormo Circuit is not particularly fast, the straight is short, there are many corners and several direction changes. This creates a technical track where tire precision makes a real difference.

As every year, an official test day will follow the Grand Prix. It marks the transition between the end of the current season and the start of the next one. On Tuesday, all factory riders will be on track to begin work for 2026.
